

HOUSEPLANTS 101:

Never kill another plant again.

Think it's impossible to turn your 'black thumb' green? It's not!
Helping your houseplants thrive is much easier than you think.

In HOUSEPLANTS 101, we'll help you:

- Understand the light, water, soil, container, humidity, and rest your plants need to stay healthy
- Discover what plants will thrive & where in your living space
- Learn to identify easy, medium, and difficult to grow plants
- Find the best places to buy plants & plant supplies
- Repot and take home the perfect plant for you in a lovely ceramic container!

Join us for this lively and informative workshop!

BACKGROUND INFORMATION (please answer all questions)

Which of the following statements best describes your relationship with plants:

- Excellent. I love plants and they love me back; I'm always looking to increase my stock and learn more.
 Good. I have a few plants that seem happy, though I tend not to understand what went wrong when something dies.
 Fair. I buy a plant, it's happy for a while, but eventually I forget about it and it dies.
 Dismal. I am the executioner; all plant life is doomed under my care.

Given the choice, I would prefer to bring home: (check all that apply)

- an 'easy' plant a plant that's a bit unusual even if that means more challenging a trailing plant anything I can keep alive I love 'em all—surprise me!

I have these placement/lighting options for a new plant: (check all that apply)

- sun porch/room south-facing window north-facing window east-facing window west-facing window fluorescent light for several hours of the day there really isn't good light anywhere in my house/apartment

I currently have these plants in my home (and don't need another):

I know I'm not good with / don't particularly care for these plants:
